Importance of Leaders Who Walk the Talk

Facilitated by Thad Henry, Leadership Development Consultant

Workshop Summary:

Leadership has been studied, dissected, categorized and analyzed in abundance—especially during the last century. There are ample books, leadership development training programs and opportunities to grow in leadership. At the core of credible leadership is trust, but without it, acts of leadership are more hollow and tend to be more transactional than deeply impacting teams or organizations. Leaders who ‘walk the talk’ are often those who more deeply impact others, achieve goals and impact organizations in lasting ways.

This workshop will focus on the importance of ‘walking the talk’ and how ‘trust’ is critical to credibility and prevailing influence. This workshop will reveal the seismic shifts in leadership trends between the past century and modern times, and how leadership is something that prevails throughout the organization by all individuals at different times. The workshop will provide invaluable insight on leadership trends and the importance of leaders who ‘walk the talk’ and engender trust among others.
